The mid-nineties was an auspicious time in Brisbane's musical history. The Valley was home to various indie venues and rehearsal spaces where now internationally-recognized bands honed their sound and played to ever growing audiences. It was from this hothouse of sonic activity that Screamfeeder delivered an album turgid with radio-friendly punk pop brilliance: their 1996 breakthrough triumph Kitten Licks introducing the Brisbane three piece to the world.

Thirteen years later, this iconic trio are embarking on a national concept tour where they will play the Kitten Licks album in its entirety, including the b-sides from the singles; an idea that clearly has dynamic frontman, Tim Steward, very excited. "I think we were chatting one day, me and Kellie (Lloyd), about all of these old bands getting together and doing this Don't Look Back kind-of-thing and we thought, 'well fuck, we've been around so long why don't we do that?' I think we looked at each other and realised that this actually could work and since we've started planning it, all of the reactions we've had have been really positive from bookers, journalists and fans."

Fully agreeing with the positive response from those in the know, when noting how many FL friends and associates have exclaimed "I have that album!" upon the news of the tour, Tim's exuberance burst through the phone line like shaken champagne, "I know! It's so weird because all of these people are getting in touch out of the blue, really excited about it, saying that they all remember the album, what they were doing and how it means so much to them. It's actually massively flattering because I didn't realise there was still that resonance there after so long."

After their recent performance at UnderExposed, there should be no doubt as to Screamfeeder's continued popularity. The exhibition's crowd was effusive with praise and calling for "more, more!" well after the event's noise curfew had expired. And, although they'd agreed not to play any old tracks before their upcoming tour, after Tim, Kellie & Dean (Shwereb) convened to decide on a couple of encore tracks, they unleashed a blistering rendition of Hi C's (still one of the best Brisbanesque film clips ever) as the closer; a teasing taste of what we can look forward to as their retrospective jaunt crosses the country over the next couple of months.

It's funny how life works out... I distinctly remember saying in about 1996 - "Gee Brisbane music is getting good. We've got Custard and Screamfeeder, who will be internationally huge, ...we've got Regurgitator, who will be big in Australian terms, ...and we've got Powderfinger, who are okay in a local band sort of way."

hehehe A music journalist friend of mine was absolutely 100% convinced that Take You Apart was going to be a huge hit, make them a household name in Australia... I remained sceptical... I cant go to the Troub gig tomorrow night, one of my best friends is having a birthday party :(Someone wanna pick up a copy of Kitten Licks for me?
